Summer Play Time

If you are looking for some new ways to integrate technology in your classroom for next year and don't know where to start, contact Brandon (braymo@mnrved.k12.mn.us) and he can develop a personalized list of technologies for you to play with over the summer. He will personalize the list to your needs and wants.

TIP/RESOURCE OF THE WEEK

Google Education On Air

Google is hosting an education conference on May 2 called Google Education On Air. The conference will take place on Google+ through the hangout feature. It is free and open to anyone to attend. Many of the sessions are focused around Google Apps, but there is also a nice variety of other sessions one can attend. All you need is a Google+ account and some familiarity with Google+ hangouts. If you or your school is interested in participating, but do not feel comfortable with Google+, let Brandon know and he can help.

Who to Follow

Who to follow on Twitter? A great question that often arises from Twitter newbies and veterans alike. It all depends on your needs, wants, and interests. If you follow someone that does not add anything to your life, unfollow them. Follow a couple people to start with, and if you like what they add, look through the people they follow. You will be amazed at how your network will grow over time. There is a great wiki dedicated to the question of who to follow, check out Twitter for Teachers.
